Economic, Nutritive Menus

Planned by cooks in Navy commissary stewards of the United States navy are trained to guard against malnutrition and food waste. They select their foods from those most abundant, and therefore cheapest, in the market each day. They plan their menus around economy and the nutritional requirements.

On the U. S. S. Seattle, receiving ship in the Brooklyn navy yard, the commissary stewards plan this type of daily menu for the hasty gobs: breakfast—orange, corned beef hash, oatmeal, apple sauce, canned sugar, butter, coffee.

The midday dinner includes beef soup made from leftover bones and vegetables (the navy can't afford to waste valuable leftovers), roast pork, canned apple sauce (canned is cheaper).

Support aboard the U. S. S. Seattle in the navy or at home. Here's the menu. Hamburger meat loaf made from leftover beef, onion gravy, boiled new potatoes, raw cabbage salad, plain cake, jam, bread.

A Record-Breaker

By MARTHA NEWBERRY (Associated Newspapers) With Service

ANNABEL's smart new shoes not only pinched her tired feet but they were putting spots to her teeth, while the overheated and crowded street car in which she was attempting to stand only egged on her rising wrath.

When the car came to what Annabel felt must be its eighty-sixth stop she catapulted bodily against her next-door neighbor.

"Crack!" Undoubtedly she had broken something and when a sharp, irritated voice breathed in her ear, "You clumsy little fool!" she was sure of it.

With flaming face she turned in time to see the broad back of a young man push through the crowded car.

"How dare he!" Hastily forcing her way through to the front door of the car, Annabel alighted, only to see the angry young man striding far ahead.

By the time she had reached Oak Street he had vanished around the corner and out of sight.

Annabel drew did not own red hair for nothing.

Suddenly she spied what proved to be the remains of the article she had accidentally broken.

Clinging she picked it up, then uttered a joyous squeal as a broken photograph record and the owner's name came to view.

It was fully a half-hour later that Annabel, hugging a new duplicate of the broken record, rang the bell of an imposing stately residence.

In her haste Annabel had not changed her little new tan shoes—those that were beginning to make her limbs and whole body ache; thus when she found herself face to face with the object of the visit she stood in silent misery and pain, for the good-looking young man facing her held her hand-tied for the moment.

"Well, what can I do for you, young lady?"

His voice was refined, but Annabel resented the smile that lit up his face.

"In the future, sir. To curb your temper!"

After she had uttered these words Annabel felt numb with fear.

"Really?" came the somewhat flippant reply.

Then the storm burst.

Never had Annabel been so eloquent. Never had a lecture on how a young man should treat a lady in the street car been so well delivered.

Then, with a final gasp she fell into the nearest chair after laying her parcel on a nearby table.

"I'm afraid you are ill!" cried her companion in alarm. The kindness in his voice caused tears to stream down her pale cheeks, tears that commenced a friendship that will ripen into love as the days sped by.

It was a crisp, bright winter's day that Jim Ray slipped a sparkling diamond on one of Annabel's slender fingers.

"And to think, Jim, that I once thought you were just an old fellow who did call me a clumsy little fool!"

"Never!" came the emphatic reply.

"Why, Jim Ray—you—you—"

"Wait a moment," interrupted her fiancé. "That was my secretary who bumped into you in the street car!"

Annabel turned away.

"I am really sorry, dear. I should have told you in the beginning, but I was afraid of scaring you away. You know, sweetheart, it was love at first sight with me, and Annabel, you know, you are just too lovely for words when you are angry."

Suddenly she turned and threw her arms about his neck.

"Jim!" she whispered quietly. "I'm—I'm a base deceiver, too!"

"What do you mean?" cried Jim excitedly. "You're not married!"

"Don't be silly, Jim. You see, I've known all the while who you were. Your secretary apologized to me after you had given him a good lecture and I made him keep a secret!"

"You little minx!" exclaimed Jim happily. "Now, young lady, you'll just have to marry me next week!"

Co-Op School In Richmond

Blackburg, Dec. 31. - What co-operatives are trying to accomplish and what they can meet into the farm family are among topics to be discussed when the fourth annual co-op school holds sessions in Richmond January 7 and 8 and in Blackburg January 9 and 10.

Mrs. W. B. Gordon and Mrs. Ben Walker, representatives of the Virginia Federation of Home Demonstration Clubs, will speak at Richmond and Blackburg, respectively, to give their views on the relationships of co-operatives to farm family living.

Beginning next Sunday afternoon January 5, at 3:00 o'clock, W. R. N. will broadcast thirteen programs of the Baptist Hour, sponsored by the radio committee of the Southern Baptist Convention.

Dr. M. E. Dodd, pastor of the First Baptist church of Shreveport, Louisiana, will be the first speaker and his subject will be, "Christ and Human Crisis."

Stations on the independent network carrying the program of the Baptist hour will be as follows: WRLN, Richmond; WPTF, Raleigh; WSPA, Spartanburg; WSB, Atlanta; WERC, Birmingham; WSLI, Jackson; WMPB, Memphis; WSM, Nashville.

Dr. George W. Truett will be the speaker on January 12.

Vegetable Laxative Makes Happy Friends

Here's a laxative that usually acts thoroughly as harsher ones but is a gentle preservative for intestines when used this way.

A quarter to a half-teaspoonful of spicy, aromatic BLACK-DRAUGHT on your tongue usually takes a good night's rest with a gentle, thorough action next morning relieving constipation, headaches, biliousness, sour stomach, bad breath.

BLACK-DRAUGHT is a splendid combination of vegetable ingredients, chief of which is an "intestinal tonic-laxative" that helps invigorate the bowels, and a mild, part tone to lax bowel muscles.

It's economical. 25 to 40 doses; 25c.

Worm-Free Chicks Safer From Colds

Danger of colds in the poultry flock will be lessened by keeping the birds free from worms.

Colds and worms often run hand in hand, since worms lower body resistance.

Watch the droppings and examine the intestinal tract of birds dressed for eating. If worms are found, treat the flock with individual worm capsules.

A number of satisfactory worm expellers are now available on the market.

After treatment, thoroughly cleanse and disinfect the poultry house. Remove and burn all droppings or scatter them in a far-away field. Also keep the birds confined for 36 hours.

Birds with colds should be protected against drafts and overcrowding, and fed a balanced ration.
